CATTARO BEING SHELLED BY WARSHIPS OF ALLIES

London, Aug. 22.—The French warships, the English Mediterranean fleet and the Montenegrin land troops are uniting in an effort to capture Cattaro, in Dalmatia, an important seaport. The French fleet is reported to be bombarding the forts. The allies are known to be desirous of establishing a naval base at Cattaro.

Reports that the French are endeavoring to capture Trieste are not credited, as it is known that the opposing forces are anxious to draw the Austrian fleet from Pola.

Servians Chase Austrians.

Nish, Aug. 22.—The Servian army is pursuing the Austrian army which it defeated on Sunday, inflicting severe losses.

According to official reports the Servians captured six guns as the result of an assault on the retiring left wing of the Austrians.

Germans May Prevent English Reaching France

Rosendaal, Holland, Aug. 22.—Fifty thousand Germans have traversed Brussels and are sweeping on to Ghent and then beyond to Ostend and Bruges.

The apparent object is to secure control of the Belgian coast from Holland to France, in order to bear down on Lille, France, cooperating with the heavy force crossing the Meuse near Namur.

The absence of any British resistance is puzzling the Germans, who may stream across Northern France to prevent the arrival of further British forces landing at northern points in France.

Reports at Antwerp say the Germans may discard the project of fortifying Brussels and may pass on to the westward. The Germans are preceded by a high army of refugees, growing by hundreds.

An Antwerp dispatch states large bodies of German cavalry have been seen on the outskirts of Maastricht. A German aviator soared over Antwerp today, the guns failing to reach him. He flew toward Brussels.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Aug. 22.—The war office admits that the French invaders of Lorraine are retreating, with the Germans suddenly assuming the aggressive, appearing at several points in combination with the Austrians.

Germans Are Concentrating.

The official bulletin of war ministry, issued yesterday afternoon, says that German troops continue to pass the River Meuse in large numbers, near Huy, and that great numbers of the enemy are being concentrated in Belgium.

The bulletin continues: "On the twentieth day of our mobilization, despite all German assurances and the predictions of their best-known military students, as well as of their general staff, they have not only been unable to obtain a decisive advantage which they had counted upon, but have been unable to carry the war into our territory."

"This advantage, however, for us, should not be exaggerated, although it has distinct moral value for our troops."

German Cavalry Defeated.

It is reported that the French have defeated a detachment of German cavalry coming from Leopoldshoehe and Hueningen in an engagement near Basel. The Germans retired in the direction of St. Louis, leaving 500 dead and wounded on the field. They lost most of their horses.

The Petit Parisien's review of the war situation today says:

"A great battle is preparing. Belgium is to be the theatre of the most formidable shock in history, the duration of which escapes prophecy."

Allies Meet Germans.

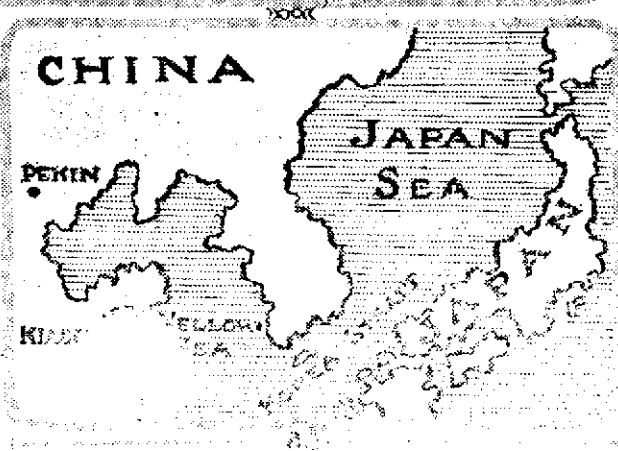

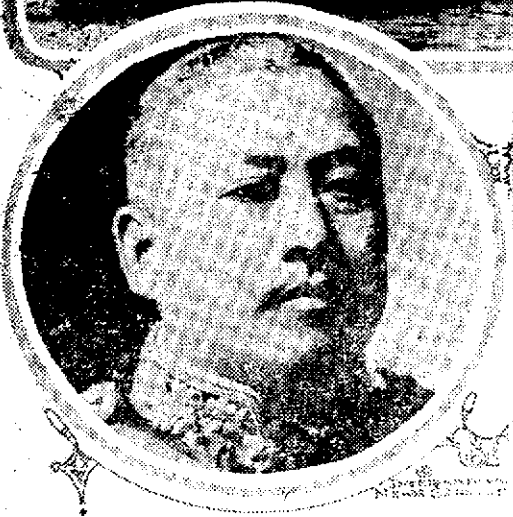

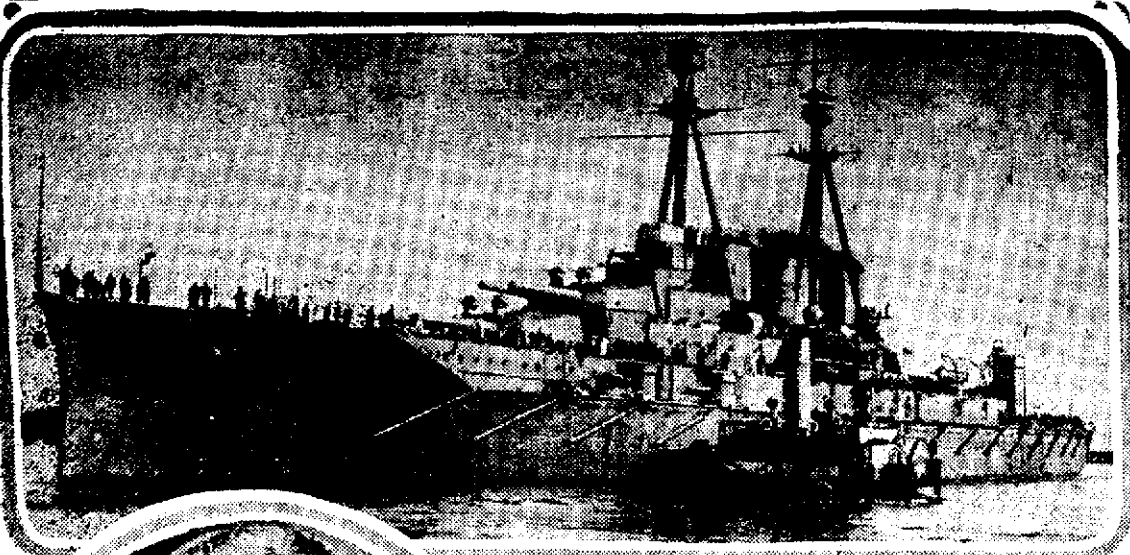

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Daily Express from Ostend, Belgium, says that on Friday an encounter occurred between the allies troops and the Germans at a spot probably southwest of Brussels. The result was favorable to the allies. German Uhlans have been seen at Waterloo.

Germans Nearing Antwerp.

The Antwerp correspondent of Reuters in a dispatch dated Friday says:

MATTERN FAMILY HOLD REUNION

200 Members of the Clan Have Enjoyable Time at Tyrone

GEORGE MATTERN PRESIDED

Event Was In Celebration of the 187th Anniversary of the Coming to America of the Founders of the Family—History of the Kin Will be Compiled by a Committee.

Over 200 members of the Mattern clan Thursday attended the annual reunion and social gathering held at Stevens park, Tyrone. The gathering was held to properly commemorate the coming to America of the founders of the family, the anniversary being the 187th. A big family dinner featured the outing.

President George W. Mattern, of Osceola Mills, had charge of the business session, and opened the meeting with an address. He welcomed all the members and dealt briefly on the history of the family.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. John A. Mattern, of McVeytown, after which all joined in the singing of that old hymn, "Blest Be The Tie That Binds." Addresses were made by Professor Louis W. Mattern, of Washington, Harry C. Patterson, president of Maryland Agriculture college, College Park, Md., and director in the experimental station at the same institution; D. M. Thompson, of the American Lime and Stone company, Tyrone, and Rev. John A. Mattern, pastor of the Methodist church at McVeytown.

A Barbecue Next Year.

It was unanimously decided that a barbecue be held next year, instead of the regular basket picnic, such as has been held in recent years. The date was set for Aug. 15, 1915, and the place Stevens park. The committee appointed to arrange for same is as follows: W. A. Mattern, of Hollidaysburg, George S. Flenner, of Tyrone, and John S. Mattern, of Franklinville. The question of compiling the eventful history of the Mattern family in book form was discussed, and the following historical committee was named, to gather data and gather up the branches in the family tree: Rev. John A. Mattern, McVeytown, chairman; Professor Lou's W. Mattern, Washington; George S. Flenner, Tyrone; John H.

Saturday August 22, 1914.

Good evening! If you are optimistic enough to imagine you are eating pork chops when nothing of the kind is in sight you can let your richer neighbor pay twenty-five cents a pound for the chops.

A Berks county judge is said to be lost in Europe. Telephone the largest ratshkeller in Berlin.

The kaiser says he will not sheathe his sword until victory perches on his banners. That sword was held in readiness for war for many years.

There is not a word of truth in the story that a Clearfield man wanted to know whether he could see the big battles of the war if he went to Paris, Kentucky.

When President Wilson asked the American citizens not to get excited over the war in Europe he meant all Americans—German-Americans and French-Americans, et cetera.

Hail as large as a man's fist is said to have fallen in Lycoming county. Possibly those hail stones were measured by the fist of the man who holds out a ten cent piece when the contribution box is passing him.

The Progress must be excused for feeling just a little proud of the fact that what news is permitted to pass the censors is given to the readers of this paper in advance of anything printed in any other paper to be had in this town. The war news in the Progress today will be confirmed by the big city papers tomorrow.

BARBARISM IN WAR.

If the small amount of news which is permitted to pass the censors is to be believed the soldiers engaged in the present European war are more unhuman than those of a thousand years ago. Stories of the massacre of women and children are told, of whole villages being put to the sword because a number of the inhabitants fired on the troops, and of the shooting of innocent persons suspected of being spies.

War is terrible enough when conducted with due regard for humane laws, but when waged without regard to the laws of civilization war becomes barbarous. It is just possible that many of the tales of cruelty on the part of German soldiers are untrue, but that some of the kaiser's troops have committed deeds which mark them as barbarians or men lost to all human instincts there can be no doubting, for these deeds have been witnessed by men who would have no reason for telling what is untrue.

It is certain that in all of the armies now engaged in a war of conquest and aggression there are men who slay for the mere sake of spilling blood, and when the truth becomes known the world will shudder to think that in the twentieth century there are rulers who have so little respect for God and so little regard for human life that they let loose the dogs of war to devour each other. The ruler who is responsible for this war will go down in history as the most execrated and despised man known to the world.

MEXICO'S NEW PRESIDENT.

Changes in governments in Mexico are so frequent and so sudden that the fact that General Carranza has assumed the role of president of that so-called republic occasions merely a ripple in the world's news centers. Carranza was one of the leaders of the Constitutionalist army, sharing with Villa and several other generals the honors of having forced Huerta to flee and turning out Carbajal to feed with the goats.

How long Carranza will remain in office remains to be learned. He was received with great enthusiasm by the Mexican people at the capital, the same Mexican people who next week or next month may demand President Carranza's expulsion from the country. So long as Mexico remains peaceful there are few people in the United States who will worry over the name of its ruler, and it is hoped that Villa or some other leader who may think himself slighted will not inaugurate a revolution until after the war in Europe has ended.

Chorus of the Nations.

"Tis you fault," "It isn't."
"I say that it is."
"And e'en when you jumped in,
'Twas none of your biz."
"Why didn't you keep out?
'Twas not your affair,
All would have been quiet
Without your tongue there."

"You forced me to action,
I cared not to fight,
But I'll do it nobly,
Since I'm in the right."
"Nay, that is where I am—
I only belong,
How dare you declare that,
When you're in the wrong?"

"I say it is your fault,"
"I vow it is yours,"
"Twas you that began it"
"Your fancy it soars,
For you did the starting,"
"The heavens forbid!"
"You did the whole business."
"I didn't,"

"You did."

SIX SMALL SMILES.

The Sins of the Father.
Tommy came home from school very morose.

Well, my son, observed the father cheerfully, how did you get on at school today?

Tommy said that he had been whipped and kept in.

It was because you told me the wrong answer, he added. Last night I asked you how much was a million dollars, and you said it was a 'hell of a lot.' That isn't the right answer.

Exclusive.

A small boy who was sitting next to a very haughty lady in a crowded omnibus kept on sniffing in a most annoying manner. At last the lady could bear it no longer, and turned to the lad.

"Boy, haven't you got a handkerchief?" she demanded.

The small boy looked at her for a few seconds and then, in a dignified tone, came the answer: "Yes, I have; but I don't lend it to strangers."

A VERY GOOD MEETING OF SALVATION ARMY.

Thursday evening a very good meeting was held in the Salvation Army hall, led by Evangelist Clegg, of Curwensville. He read for his lesson the 33rd chapter of Isaiah and afterward dwelt on the theme, "Will God be Disappointed in His Followers?" which was well received by the audience. At the close of his sermon he held an altar service in which all christians took part and the Army hopes that the vows made there before God will not soon be forgotten and that it may be seed sown on good ground which may bring sheaves to be garnered at the last day.

THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"No," he admitted. "An onyx clock sinks, that's true. That's a very nice little point, that onyx clock. He may be trying to sell it or perhaps— He did not finish."

I went back immediately, only stopping at the market to get meat for Mr. Reynolds' supper. It was after half past 5, and dusk was coming on. I got a boat and was rowed directly home. Peter was not at the foot of the steps. I pulled the boatman and let him go and turned to go up the stairs. Some one was speaking in the hall above.

I have read somewhere that no two voices are exactly alike, just as no two violins ever produce the same sound. I think it is what they call the timbre that is different. I have, for instance, never heard a voice like Mr. Pitman's, although Mr. Harry Lander's in a photograph resembles it. And voices have always done for me what odors do for some people, to revive forgotten scenes and old memories. But the memory that the voice at the head of the stairs brought back was not very old, although I had forgotten it. I seemed to hear again all at once the lapping of the water Sunday morning as it began to come in over the floor, the sound of Terry ripping up the parlor carpet and Mrs. Lader's calling me a she devil in the next room. In reply to this very voice.

But when I got to the top of the stairs it was only Mr. Howell who had brought his visitor to the flood district, and on getting her splashed with the muddy water had taken her to my house for a towel and a cake of soap.

I lighted the lamp in the hall and Mr. Howell introduced the girl. She was a pretty girl, slim and young, and she had taken her wetting good naturedly.

"I know we are intruders, Mrs. Pitman," she said, holding out her hand. "Especially now, when you are in trouble."

"I have told Miss Harvey a little," Mr. Howell said, "and I promised to show her Peter, but he is not here."

I think I had known it was my sister's child from the moment I lighted the lamp. There was something of Alma in her, not Alma's hardness or haughtiness, but Alma's dark blue eyes with black lashes, and Alma's nose. Alma was always the beauty of the family. What with the day's excitement and seeing Alma's child like this, in my house, I felt things going round and clutched at the stair rail. Mr. Howell caught me.

"Why, Mrs. Pitman?" he said. "What's the matter?"

I got myself in hand in a moment and smiled at the girl.

"Nothing at all," I said. "Indigestion, most likely. Too much tea the last day or two and not enough solid food. I've been too anxious to eat."

Lida— for she was that to me at once, although I had never seen her before—Lida was all sympathy and sweetness. She actually asked me to go with her to a restaurant and have a real dinner. I could imagine Alma, had she known! But I excused myself.

"I have to cook something for Mr. Reynolds," I said, "and I'm better now, anyhow, thank you. Mr. Howell, may I speak to you for a moment?"

He followed me along the back hall, which was dusk.

"I have remembered something that I had forgotten, Mr. Howell," I said. "On Sunday morning the Ladleys had a visitor."

"Yes?"

"They had very few visitors."

"I see."

"I did not see him, but I heard his voice," Mr. Howell did not move, but I fancied he drew his breath in quickly. "It sounded—it was not by any chance you?"

"I? A newspaper man, who goes to bed at 3 a. m. on Sunday morning, up and about at 10?"

"I didn't say what time it was," I said sharply.

But at that moment Lida called from the front hall.

"I think I hear Peter," she said. "He is shut in somewhere, whining."

We went forward at once. She was right. Peter was scratching at the door of Mr. Ladley's room, although I had left the door closed and Peter in the hall. I let him out and he crawled to me on three legs, whimpering. Mr. Howell bent over him and felt the fourth.

"Poor little beast," he said. "His leg is broken."

He made a split for the dog, and with Lida helping they put him to bed in a clothes basket in my upstairs kitchen. It was easy to see how things lay with Mr. Howell. He was all eyes for her. He made excuses to touch her hand or her arm, little caressing touches that made her color brighten. And with all there was a sort of hopelessness in his manner, as if he knew how far the girl was out of his reach. Knowing Alma and her pride, I knew better than they how hopeless it was.

I was not so sure about Lida. I wondered if she was in love with the boy or only in love with love. She was very young, as I had been. God help her if, like me, she sacrificed everything to discover too late that she was only in love with love.

CHAPTER V.

MR. REYNOLDS did not come home to dinner at all. The water had got into the basement at the store, he telephoned, one of the flood gates in a sewer having leaked, and they were moving some of the departments to an upper floor. I had expected to have him in the house that evening, and now I was left alone again.

But, as it happened, I was not alone. Mr. Graves, one of the city detectives, came at half past 6 and went carefully over the Ladleys' room. I showed him the towel and the slipper and the broken knife and where we had found the knife blade. He was very noncommittal and left in a half hour, taking the articles with him in a newspaper.

At 7 the doorbell rang. I went down as far as I could on the staircase and I saw a boat outside the door, with the boatman and a woman in it. I called to them to bring the boat back along the hall, and I had a queer feeling that it might be Mrs. Ladley and that I'd been making a fool of myself all day for nothing. But it was not Mrs. Ladley.

"Is this No. 42?" asked the woman, as the boat came back.

"Yes."

"Does Mr. Ladley live here?"

"Yes. But he is not here now."

"Are you Mrs. Pittock?"

"Pitman, yes."

The boat bumped against the stairs, and the woman got out. She was as tall as Mrs. Ladley, and when I saw her in the light from the upper hall I knew her instantly. It was Temple Hope, the leading woman from the Liberty theater.

"I would like to talk to you, Mrs. Pitman," she said. "Where can we go?"

I led the way back to my room, and when she had followed me in she turned and shut the door.

"Now, then," she said without any preliminary, "where is Jennie Brice?"

"I don't know, Miss Hope," I answered.

We looked at each other for a minute, and each of us saw what the other suspected.

"He has killed her," she exclaimed. "She was afraid he would do it, and he has."

"Killed her and thrown her into the river," I said. "That's what I think, and he'll go free at that. It seems there isn't any murder when there isn't any corpse."

"Nonsense! If he has done that the river will give her up eventually."

"The river doesn't always give them up," I retorted. "Not in flood time, anyhow. Or when they are found it is months later, and you can't prove anything."

She had only a little time, being due at the theater soon, but she sat down and told me the story she told after ward on the stand.

She had known Jennie Brice for years, they having been together in the chorus as long before as Naddy.

"She was married then to a fellow on the vaudeville circuit," Miss Hope said. "He left her about that time, and she took up with Lida. I don't think they were ever married."

"What?" I said, jumping to my feet. "And they came to a respectable house like this! There's never been a breath of scandal about this house, Miss Hope, and if it comes out I'm ruined."

"Well, perhaps they were married," she said. "Anyhow, they were always quarreling. And when he wasn't playing it was worse. She used to come to my hotel and cry her eyes out."

"I knew you were friends," I said. "Almost the last thing she said to me was about the black and white dress of hers you were to borrow for the piece this week."

"Black and white dress? I borrow one of Jennie Brice's dresses!" exclaimed Miss Hope. "I should think not! I have plenty of my own."

That puzzled me, for she had said it, that was sure. And then I remembered that I had not seen the dress in the room that day, and I went to look for it. It was gone. I came back and told Miss Hope.

"A black and white dress! Did it have a red collar?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Then I remember it. She wore a small black hat with a red quill with that dress. You might look for the hat."

She followed me back to the room and stood in the doorway while I searched. The hat was gone, too.

"Perhaps, after all, he's telling the truth," she said thoughtfully. "Her fur coat isn't in the closet, is it?"

It was gone. It is strange that all day I had never thought of looking over her clothes and seeing what was missing. I hadn't known all she had, of course, but I had seen her all winter in her fur coat and admired it. It was a striped fur, brown and gray, and very unusual. But with the coat missing and a dress and hat gone, it began to look as if I had been making a fool of myself and stirring up a tempest in a teacup. Miss Hope was as puzzled as I was.

"Anyhow if he didn't kill her," she said, "it isn't because he did not want to. Only last week she had hysterics in my dressing room and said he had threatened to poison her. It was all Mr. Brounson, the business manager, and I could do to quiet her."

She looked at her wrist and exclaimed that she was late for a boat. The river had been rising rapidly for the last hour or two, and I heard the boat scrape as it went over the door sill. I did not know whether to be glad that the wife was gone down and I could live like a cat again or to be sorry for him of what we might find in the mud that was at ways left.

Peter was lying where I had put him on a folded blanket last in a clothes basket. I went back to him and sat down beside the basket.

"Peter!" I said. "Poor old Peter!"

SOCIAL

Wednesday evening, Aug. 19 about seven o'clock, a group of citizens gathered at the home of Mrs. Ashley Stewart and tendered a farewell party Mrs. Stewart and daughter, Miss Bard, expect to leave for Clearfield next week where they will make their future home. Games and music were indulged in until 12 P. M., when long tables on the lawn were spread with delicious refreshments. As the people gathered around those tables the lights gleaming from the shade trees made a most beautiful sight. This popular family will be missed but what is Woodland's loss will be Clearfield's gain. We all join in wishing them happiness and prosperity. The out of town guests were Mrs. James Angew, of Alabama, Mrs. Harry Gilliland of Pottersdale, Mrs. Harvey Overly of Steubenville, Ohio, and Mrs. Paul Nall, of Pittsburgh.

GOOD DETECTIVE STORY SHOWN IN THE MOVIES

"The Man of Her Choice."

In "The Man of Her Choice" the girl, the man and the servant are cast away upon an uninhabited island—yes, and the dog. The girl and the man are engaged. The man, being just an ordinary, lower case man after all, thinks first of himself and his comfort. The servant finds edible berries and the man must have the largest portion because he is the master. The servant catches fish and the man must have the biggest one. In fact, the servant becomes a man and the man becomes a servant—to his own comfort.

The girl watches these things, little things, unnoticed in the whirl of civilized life; but bringing such a message in the waste of sand and sea. The servant, who has become a man, loves the girl and she knows. When they are rescued and she is in peril of returning again to the false standards for which stands the man, who is servant, the girl decides she is woman and takes the man of her choice—the servant who has become man.

In this Powers drama, which will be shown at the Opera house this evening Grace Conrad plays the part of the girl and Frances Ford the part of the servant.

"The Symphony of Souls"

It is the sympathy of a sweet blind girl that gives a young artist the inspiration for a great symphony. Then comes separation—longing—and final reconciliation.

"Detective Dan Cupid."

Love-lorn Bob is infatuated with a young woman whose name he does not know. He has been following her around for a week, and he feels that his heart will burst if he does not get an opportunity to declare his passion. One day he follows her to a park, and there conceives an idea. If he could only steal her handbag and later return it to her at the hotel, using the incident as an introduction, the rest, he believes, would be smooth sailing. He puts the idea into execution. However, a nearby policeman sees him steal the handbag and gives chase. Bob makes good his escape. Upon examining the purse he finds that it contains a costly diamond necklace. The next morning he awakens to find himself a notorious thief with a full description of himself in the papers. However, he learns that her name is Miss Victoria Van Allen. The girl's father employs Detective Potts to recover the jewel and land the thief.

Bob begins a wild and sensational career in attempting to return the necklace to the beautiful Victoria, and at the same time elude the sagacious Potts. He disguises and Potts disguises. They discover each other's identity and each assumes a new disguise.

Howbeit, the course of true love leads to victory. Bob is forgiven, and his suit accepted by Victoria, while Potts is presented with a fee large enough to hush his conscience in forgetfulness.

EUROPEAN WAR AND THE OLYMPIC GAMES OF 1916

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

(By International News Service)
New York, August 22.—The European war means that the Olympic games will not be played in Berlin in 1916. Either they will be shifted to the United States or cancelled altogether. The latter seems the most likely happening.

If the war should drag until 1916 it seems certain that none of the European powers engaged in the strife would have time to think about such pink tea battles as those staged at the Olympic doings. And even if it wanted to send a team it probably couldn't because by that time some of their best little athletes may be shot full of holes.

Should war be over before the end of this year it's possible that the games will be played, but not in Berlin. Fancy a bunch of Frenchmen, Englishmen or Russians invading the Kaiser's domain and devoting themselves exclusively to peaceful sports. Imagine the German residents of Berlin hiring a brass band to herald the arrival of some of their present day enemies.

One needn't stretch the imagination very hard to figure out what would happen if all the athletics got together and someone started a discussion concerning the merits of the different armies and navies.

The officials who have charge of the Olympic doings for 1916 refuse to state definitely whether the games will be transferred or postponed indefinitely. But it is known that they view the possibility of holding the 1916 Olympic games in Berlin as hopeless.

The Browns, used to a free and easy life, didn't take very kindly at first to the Y. M. C. A. methods that Branch Rickey put into force as soon as he took over the managerial reins. But they've gotten used to them now, and most of them are willing to admit that Rickey's rule that sends a player to bed at a certain hour every p. m. is a good one for the player's general health and general good.

Refraining from poker and other little gambling games was another hardship for the Browns, but they have overcome their gambling instincts—at least while Rickey is around.

The Browns this year are higher up in the race than they have been for years and years. Whether the improvement is due to Rickey's new rules, or whether it's just a natural improvement that has come through infusion of new blood is a question. In the meantime, Rickey gets the credit.

The Cardinals have on their roster a pitcher who wears glasses. His name is Lee Meadows, a giant right hander, who hails from Durham, N. C. He will report to the Cards later in the season.

Despite the fact that Meadows is compelled to wear glasses while at work he has been pitching wonderful baseball, and was sought after by a number of big leagues, but the Cards nabbed him.

PITTSBURGH MAN WINS CHIEF HIBERNIAN HONOR

The principal business transacted yesterday in the state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians was the election of officers. P. J. Killgallen, of Pittsburgh, won out after a close contest with Dr. J. A. Farrell, of Chester, a margin of six votes separating them. There was no contest for the other offices, which are as follows: Vice president, John Campion, Schuylkill county; secretary, John B. Boyle, Luzerne.

The meeting place for 1915 was not chosen, this detail being left to the executive committee. Yesterday morning a resolution was adopted deploring the death of Pope Pius. After the newly-elected officers were installed adjournment was taken.

The auxiliary session was more protracted, the elections requiring a lot of time. In the race for president, a Pittsburgh woman won out. Miss Margaret McQuaide, county secretary of Allegheny county, defeating Mrs. Margaret Gallagher by 17 votes.

TROUBLES OF WAR CORRESPONDENTS

Newspaper Men Have Anything But a Happy Time of It OFTENER IN JAIL THAN OUT

Arrested on Suspicion of Being Spies They Have Difficulty in Convincing Ignorant Peasants That They are Harmless Journalists— Experience of One Reporter in Belgium.

(By International News Service.)

London, Aug. 22.—The newspaper correspondents attempting to cover the great war in Europe are having a sorry time. Especially in Belgium, where the bulk of the fighting has occurred, are correspondents harried by almost every conceivable difficulty. According to a letter received here from a London newspaper man in Belgium, correspondents there are being arrested several times daily as spies, are not allowed to get within canon sound of the fighting and if they do happen to obtain any information regarding what is going on, the censors will not allow them to send it.

"I do not anticipate ever getting anywhere near a battlefield," writes the correspondent referred to, "and I do not expect I should be allowed to return alive with my story if I did get to the front."

"I am having a ——— of a time with these military blighters here. Most of my afternoons and evenings are spent in jail. I have a pass from the Belgian war office with my photograph attached and countersigned by the general staff, but the trouble is that no one will apparently recognize it. It is a pure bluff, and not worth the paper it is written on."

"Also the peasants who are too infirm to go to the front and the youngsters of every village throughout Belgium have turned themselves into a police force. If you try to go anywhere outside of Brussels in an automobile you are held up, searched and asked to show your papers every half-mile."

"Yesterday two Belgian journalists and myself went to Namur and Dinant, a journey of about eighty miles, hoping to discover the whereabouts of friends. I kept a record and found we were stopped fifty-two times."

"On reaching Namur on our way back despite our official papers we were arrested as spies and dragged off by a band of ferocious soldiers to the military headquarters, followed by a savage mob, anxious to lynch us. We were kept there for some time before being released."

"When we got to the office of the commandant, we found the London Times man already there, a prisoner."

"The most dangerous part of the game is that the average peasant armed with a rusty blunderbuss, who harries one along the roads in the country, cannot even read and official papers mean nothing to him."

"For them everybody not wearing the Belgian uniform is a German spy."

"Some Belgian officers are little better than these ignorant peasants. Let me give you an example. Yesterday, on leaving Namur on our way to Brussels three officers, members of the Flying Corps, asked for a lift as far as the aerodrome. Anxious to oblige, I consented, and drove them right inside the ground where the aeroplanes are kept. Once there they rewarded our kindness by denouncing us as spies and ordering our arrest by soldiers.

"This will give you some idea of the difficulties encountered in attempting to get anywhere near where things are happening. I do not anticipate ever getting anywhere within sound of a battlefield, and, even if I should succeed in getting to the front, I do not expect that I should ever be allowed to return alive with my story."

"All these people have made up their minds to harry correspondents, as if they were so many dogs."

JAPAN AND GERMANY TO CLASH

Japan Ready for the Worst.

New York, Aug. 22.—The "Evening Telegram" prints a dispatch from Tokyo stating that Japan defies Germany to do her worst. Japan is preparing to assault Kiao-Chau territory. Immediately upon the expiration of the ultimatum tomorrow the Japanese will make an attack.

In defying Japan, Germany refused to withdraw her warships from the Pacific waters. Nor did Germany make any preparation to evacuate Kiao-Chau.

War a Matter of Course.

Tokio, Aug. 22.—The Japanese press is coolly viewing war with Germany as a matter of fact.

Japan Will Not Consent.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Japan not only will not request United States to take over Kiao-Chau for transfer to China, as proposed by the latter at the instance of Germany, but will not consent to any arrangement of this character. Furthermore, the ambassador has informed the administration that the participation in any scheme to permit Germany to evade the exact terms of the ultimatum will be regarded by Japan as an unfriendly act.

Japanese Fleet Sails.

Shanghai, Aug. 22.—The Japanese battleship fleet has sailed to bombard Tsing-Toa, Kiao-Chau seaport and cover the landing of Japanese troops there, according to an official statement here. Sixteen thousand soldiers sailed on the Kokura.

Will Care for Japanese Interests.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Ambassador China today requested Secretary Bryan to take care of Japanese interests in Germany in the event of war.

Secretary Bryan told the viscount that America would be pleased to care for Japanese interests in any country where it is impossible for Japan to maintain diplomatic offices.

China stated there is no likelihood of the Germans answering the ultimatum.

Situation of Allies Favorable.

A Reuter dispatch from Antwerp, says that Lieut. Col. Fairholme, attache of the British legation, states that the situation of the allies is entirely favorable. The Belgian's 10-day defense is equivalent to the loss of a great battle to the Germans.

Germans May Prevent English Reaching France

Rosendaal, Holland, Aug. 22.—Fifty thousand Germans have traversed Brussels and are sweeping on to Ghent and then beyond to Ostend and Bruges.

The apparent object is to secure control of the Belgian coast from Holland to France, in order to bear down on Lille, France, cooperating with the heavy force crossing the Meuse near Namur.

The absence of any British resistance is puzzling the Germans, who may stream across Northern France to prevent the arrival of further British forces landing at northern points in France.

Reports at Antwerp say the Germans may discard the project of fortifying Brussels and may pass on to the westward. The Germans are preceded by a high army of refugees, growing by hundreds.

An Antwerp dispatch states large bodies of German cavalry have been seen on the outskirts of Maastricht. A German aviator soared over Antwerp today, the guns failing to reach him. He flew toward Brussels.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Aug. 22.—The war office admits that the French invaders of Lorraine are retreating, with the Germans suddenly assuming the aggressive, appearing at several points in combination with the Austrians.

Germans Are Concentrating.

The official bulletin of war ministry, issued yesterday afternoon, says that German troops continue to pass the River Meuse in large numbers, near Huy, and that great numbers of the enemy are being concentrated in Belgium.

The bulletin continues: "On the twentieth day of our mobilization, despite all German assurances and the predictions of their best-known military students, as well as of their general staff, they have not only been unable to obtain a decisive advantage which they had counted upon, but have been unable to carry the war into our territory."

"This advantage, however, for us, should not be exaggerated, although it has distinct moral value for our troops."

German Cavalry Defeated.

It is reported that the French have defeated a detachment of German cavalry coming from Leopoldshoehe and Hueningen in an engagement near Basel. The Germans retired in the direction of St. Louis, leaving 500 dead and wounded on the field. They lost most of their horses.

The Petit Parisien's review of the war situation today says:

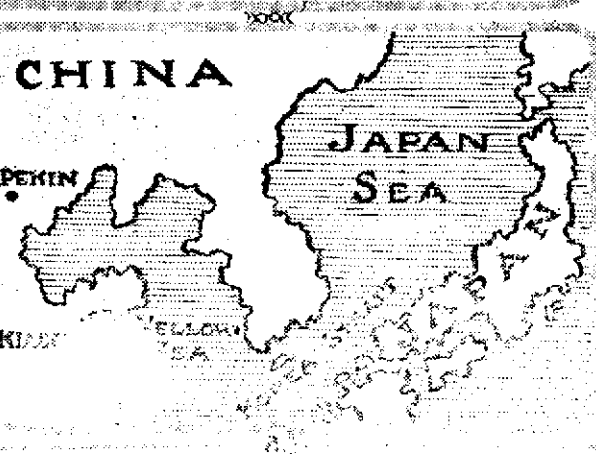

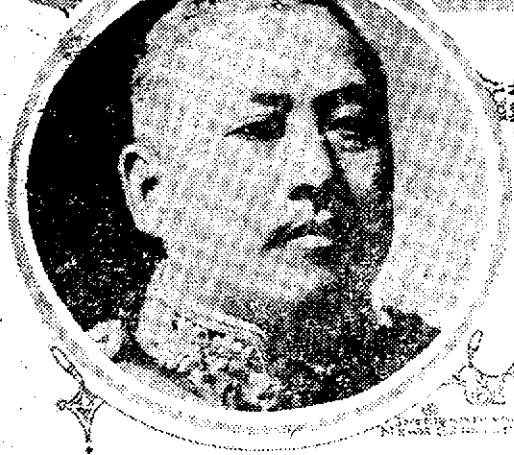

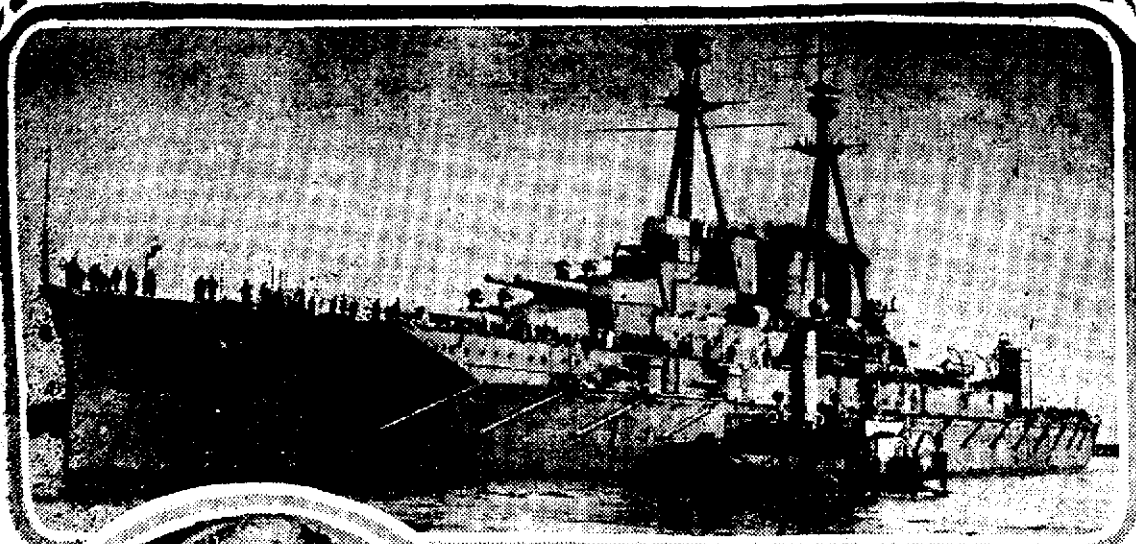

"A great battle is preparing. Belgium is to be the theatre of the most formidable shock in history, the duration of which escapes prophecy."

Allies Meet Germans.

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Daily Express from Ostend, Belgium, says that on Friday an encounter occurred between the allies troops and the Germans at a spot probably southwest of Brussels. The result was favorable to the allies. German Uhlans have been seen at Waterloo.

MATTERN FAMILY HOLD REUNION

200 Members of the Clan Have Enjoyable Time at Tyrone

GEORGE MATTERN PRESIDED

Event Was In Celebration of the 187th Anniversary of the Coming to America of the Founders of the Family—History of the Kin Will be Compiled by a Committee.

Over 200 members of the Mattern clan Thursday attended the annual reunion and social gathering held at Stevens park, Tyrone. The gathering was held to properly commemorate the coming to America of the founders of the family, the anniversary being the 187th. A big family dinner featured the outing.

President George W. Mattern, of Osceola Mills, had charge of the business session, and opened the meeting with an address. He welcomed all the members and dealt briefly on the history of the family.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. John A. Mattern, of McVeytown, after which all joined in the singing of that old hymn, "Blest Be The Tie That Binds." Addresses were made by Professor Louis W. Mattern, of Washington, Harry C. Patterson, president of Maryland Agriculture college, College Park, Md., and director in the experimental station at the same institution; D. M. Thompson, of the American Lime and Stone company, Tyrone, and Rev. John A. Mattern, pastor of the Methodist church at McVeytown.

A Barbecue Next Year.

It was unanimously decided that a barbecue be held next year, instead of the regular basket picnic, such as has been held in recent years. The date was set for Aug. 15, 1915, and the place Stevens' park. The committee appointed to arrange for same is as follows: W. A. Mattern, of Hollidaysburg, George S. Flenner, of Tyrone, and John S. Mattern, of Franklinville. The question of compiling the eventful history of the Mattern family in book form was discussed, and the following historical committee was named, to gather data and gather up the branches in the family tree: Rev. John A. Mattern, McVeytown, chairman; Professor Lou's W. Mattern, Washington; George S. Flenner, Tyrone; John H. (Continued on Page Eight)

Good evening! If you are optimistic enough to imagine you are eating pork chops when nothing of the kind is in sight you can let your richer neighbor pay twenty-five cents a pound for the chops.

A Berks county judge is said to be lost in Europe. Telephone the largest ratshkeller in Berlin.

The kaiser says he will not sheathe his sword until victory perches on his banners. That sword was held in readiness for war for many years.

There is not a word of truth in the story that a Clearfield man wanted to know whether he could see the big battles of the war if he went to Paris, Kentucky.

When President Wilson asked the American citizens not to get excited over the war in Europe he meant all Americans—German-Americans and French-Americans, et cetera.

Hail as large as a man's fist is said to have fallen in Lycoming county. Possibly those hail stones were measured by the fist of the man who holds out a ten cent piece when the contribution box is passing him.

The Progress must be excused for feeling just a little proud of the fact that what news is permitted to pass the censors is given to the readers of this paper in advance of anything printed in any other paper to be had in this town. The war news in the Progress today will be confirmed by the big city papers tomorrow.

BARBARISM IN WAR.

If the small amount of news which is permitted to pass the censors is to be believed the soldiers engaged in the present European war are more unhuman than those of a thousand years ago. Stories of the massacre of women and children are told, of whole villages being put to the sword because a number of the inhabitants fired on the troops, and of the shooting of innocent persons suspected of being spies.

War is terrible enough when conducted with due regard for humane laws, but when waged without regard to the laws of civilization war becomes barbarous. It is just possible that many of the tales of cruelty on the part of German soldiers are untrue, but that some of the kaiser's troops have committed deeds which mark them as barbarians or men lost to all human instincts there can be no doubting, for these deeds have been witnessed by men who would have no reason for telling what is untrue.

It is certain that in all of the armies now engaged in a war of conquest and aggression there are men who slay for the mere sake of spilling blood, and when the truth becomes known the world will shudder to think that in the twentieth century there are rulers who have so little respect for God and so little regard for human life that they let loose the dogs of war to devour each other. The ruler who is responsible for this war will go down in history as the most execrated and despised man known to the world.

MEXICO'S NEW PRESIDENT.

Changes in governments in Mexico are so frequent and so sudden that the fact that General Carranza has assumed the role of president of that so-called republic occasions merely a ripple in the world's news centers. Carranza was one of the leaders of the Constitutionalist army, sharing with Villa and several other generals the honors of having forced Huerta to flee and turning out Carbajal to feed with the goats.

How long Carranza will remain in office remains to be learned. He was received with great enthusiasm by the Mexican people at the capital, the same Mexican people who next week or next month may demand President Carranza's expulsion from the country. So long as Mexico remains peaceful there are few people in the United States who will worry over the name of its ruler, and it is hoped that Villa or some other leader who may think himself slighted will not inaugurate a revolution until after the war in Europe has ended.

Chorus of the Nations.

"Tis you fault," "It isn't."
"I say that it is."
"And e'en when you jumped in,
"Twas none of your biz."
"Why didn't you keep out?
"Twas not your affair,
All would have been quiet
Without your tongue there."

"You forced me to action,
I cared not to fight,
But I'll do it nobly,
Since I'm in the right."
"Nay, that is where I am—
I only belong,
How dare you declare that,
When you're in the wrong?"

"I say it is your fault,"
"I vow it is yours,"
"Twas you that began it"
"Your fancy it soars,
For you did the starting,"
"The heavens forbid!"
"You did the whole business."
"I didn't,"

"You did."

SIX SMALL SMILES.

The Sins of the Father.
Tommy came home from school very morose.

Well, my son, observed the father cheerfully, how did you get on at school today?

Tommy said that he had been whipped and kept in.

It was because you told me the wrong answer, he added. Last night I asked you how much was a million dollars, and you said it was a 'hell of a lot.' That isn't the right answer.

Exclusive.

A small boy who was sitting next to a very haughty lady in a crowded omnibus kept on sniffing in a most annoying manner. At last the lady could bear it no longer, and turned to the lad.

"Boy, haven't you got a handkerchief?" she demanded.

The small boy looked at her for a few seconds and then, in a dignified tone, came the answer: "Yes, I have; but I don't lend it to strangers."

A VERY GOOD MEETING OF SALVATION ARMY.

Thursday evening a very good meeting was held in the Salvation Army hall, led by Evangelist Clegg, of Curwensville. He read for his lesson the 33rd chapter of Isaiah and afterward dwelt on the theme, "Will God be Disappointed in His Followers?" which was well received by the audience. At the close of his sermon he held an altar service in which all christians took part and the Army hopes that the vows made there before God will not soon be forgotten and that it may be seed sown on good ground which may bring sheaves to be garnered at the last day.

THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"No," he admitted. "An onyx clock sinks, that's true. That's a very nice little point, that onyx clock. He may be trying to sell it or perhaps— He did not finish."

I went back immediately, only stopping at the market to get meat for Mr. Reynolds' supper. It was after half past 5, and dusk was coming on. I got a boat and was rowed directly home. Peter was not at the foot of the steps. I pulled the boatman and let him go and turned to go up the stairs. Some one was speaking in the hall above.

I have read somewhere that no two voices are exactly alike, just as no two violins ever produce the same sound. I think it is what they call the timbre that is different. I have, for instance, never heard a voice like Mr. Pitman's, although Mr. Harry Lander's in a photograph resembles it. And voices have always done for me what odors do for some people, to revive forgotten scenes and old memories. But the memory that the voice at the head of the stairs brought back was not very old, although I had forgotten it. I seemed to hear again all at once the lapping of the water Sunday morning as it began to come in over the floor, the sound of Terry ripping up the parlor carpet and Mrs. Lader's calling me a she devil in the next room. In reply to this very voice.

But when I got to the top of the stairs it was only Mr. Howell who had brought his visitor to the flood district, and on getting her splashed with the muddy water had taken her to my house for a towel and a cake of soap.

I lighted the lamp in the hall and Mr. Howell introduced the girl. She was a pretty girl, slim and young, and she had taken her wetting good naturedly.

"I know we are intruders, Mrs. Pitman," she said, holding out her hand. "Especially now, when you are in trouble."

"I have told Miss Harvey a little," Mr. Howell said, "and I promised to show her Peter, but he is not here."

I think I had known it was my sister's child from the moment I lighted the lamp. There was something of Alma in her, not Alma's hardness or haughtiness, but Alma's dark blue eyes with black lashes, and Alma's nose. Alma was always the beauty of the family. What with the day's excitement and seeing Alma's child like this, in my house, I felt things going round and clutched at the stair rail. Mr. Howell caught me.

"Why, Mrs. Pitman?" he said.

"What's the matter?"

I got myself in hand in a moment and smiled at the girl.

"Nothing at all," I said. "Indigestion, most likely. Too much tea the last day or two and not enough solid food. I've been too anxious to eat."

Lida—for she was that to me at once, although I had never seen her before—Lida was all sympathy and sweetness. She actually asked me to go with her to a restaurant and have a real dinner. I could imagine Alma, had she known! But I excused myself.

"I have to cook something for Mr. Reynolds," I said, "and I'm better now, anyhow, thank you. Mr. Howell, may I speak to you for a moment?"

He followed me along the back hall, which was dusk.

"I have remembered something that I had forgotten, Mr. Howell," I said. "On Sunday morning the Ladleys had a visitor."

"Yes?"

"They had very few visitors."

"I see."

"I did not see him, but I heard his voice," Mr. Howell did not move, but I fancied he drew his breath in quickly. "It sounded—it was not by any chance you?"

"I? A newspaper man, who goes to bed at 3 a. m. on Sunday morning, up and about at 10?"

"I didn't say what time it was," I said sharply.

But at that moment Lida called from the front hall.

"I think I hear Peter," she said. "He is shut in somewhere, whining."

We went forward at once. She was right. Peter was scratching at the door of Mr. Ladley's room, although I had left the door closed and Peter in the hall. I let him out and he crawled to me on three legs, whimpering. Mr. Howell bent over him and felt the fourth.

"Poor little beast," he said. "His leg is broken."

He made a split for the dog, and with Lida helping they put him to bed in a clothes basket in my upstairs kitchen. It was easy to see how things lay with Mr. Howell. He was all eyes for her. He made excuses to touch her hand or her arm, little caressing touches that made her color brighten. And with all there was a sort of hopelessness in his manner, as if he knew how far the girl was out of his reach. Knowing Alma and her pride, I knew better than they how hopeless it was.

I was not so sure about Lida. I wondered if she was in love with the boy or only in love with love. She was very young, as I had been. God help her if, like me, she sacrificed everything to discover too late that she was only in love with love.

CHAPTER V.

MR. REYNOLDS did not come home to dinner at all. The water had got into the basement at the store, he telephoned, one of the flood gates in a sewer having leaked, and they were moving some of the departments to an upper floor. I had expected to have him in the house that evening, and now I was left alone again.

But, as it happened, I was not alone. Mr. Graves, one of the city detectives, came at half past 6 and went carefully over the Ladleys' room. I showed him the towel and the slipper and the broken knife and where we had found the knife blade. He was very noncommittal and left in a half hour, taking the articles with him in a newspaper.

At 7 the doorbell rang. I went down as far as I could on the staircase and I saw a boat outside the door, with the boatman and a woman in it. I called to them to bring the boat back along the hall, and I had a queer feeling that it might be Mrs. Ladley and that I'd been making a fool of myself all day for nothing. But it was not Mrs. Ladley.

"Is this No. 42?" asked the woman, as the boat came back.

"Yes."

"Does Mr. Ladley live here?"

"Yes. But he is not here now."

"Are you Mrs. Pittock?"

"Pitman, yes."

The boat bumped against the stairs, and the woman got out. She was as tall as Mrs. Ladley, and when I saw her in the light from the upper hall I knew her instantly. It was Temple Hope, the leading woman from the Liberty theater.

"I would like to talk to you, Mrs. Pitman," she said. "Where can we go?"

I led the way back to my room, and when she had followed me in she turned and shut the door.

"Now, then," she said without any preliminaries, "where is Jennie Brice?"

"I don't know, Miss Hope," I answered.

We looked at each other for a minute, and each of us saw what the other suspected.

"He has killed her!" she exclaimed.

"She was afraid he would do it, and— he has."

"Killed her and thrown her into the river," I said. "That's what I think, and he'll go free at that. It seems there isn't any murder when there isn't any corpse."

"Nonsense! If he has done that the river will give her up eventually."

"The river doesn't always give them up," I retorted. "Not in flood time, anyhow. Or when they are found it is months later, and you can't prove anything."

She had only a little time, being due at the theater soon, but she sat down and told me the story she told after ward on the stand.

She had known Jennie Brice for years, they having been together in the chorus as long before as Naddy.

"She was married then to a fellow on the vaudeville circuit," Miss Hope said. "He left her about that time, and she took up with Lida. I don't think they were ever married."

"What?" I said, jumping to my feet.

"And they came to a respectable house like this! There's never been a breath of scandal about this house, Miss Hope, and if it comes out I'm ruined."

"Well, perhaps they were married," she said. "Anyhow, they were always quarreling. And when he wasn't playing it was worse. She used to come to my hotel and cry her eyes out."

"I knew you were friends," I said.

"Almost the last thing she said to me was about the black and white dress of hers you were to borrow for the piece this week."

"Black and white dress? I borrow one of Jennie Brice's dresses!" exclaimed Miss Hope. "I should think not! I have plenty of my own."

That puzzled me, for she had said it, that was sure. And then I remembered that I had not seen the dress in the room that day, and I went to look for it. It was gone. I came back and told Miss Hope.

"A black and white dress! Did it have a red collar?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Then I remember it. She wore a small black hat with a red quill with that dress. You might look for the hat."

She followed me back to the room and stood in the doorway while I searched. The hat was gone, too.

"Perhaps, after all, he's telling the truth," she said thoughtfully. "Her fur coat isn't in the closet, is it?"

It was gone. It is strange that all day I had never thought of looking over her clothes and seeing what was missing. I hadn't known all she had, of course, but I had seen her all winter in her fur coat and admired it. It was a striped fur, brown and gray, and very unusual. But with the coat missing and a dress and hat gone, it began to look as if I had been making a fool of myself and stirring up a tempest in a teacup. Miss Hope was as puzzled as I was.

"Anyhow if he didn't kill her," she said, "it isn't because he did not want to. Only last week she had hysterics in my dressing room and said he had threatened to poison her. It was all Mr. Brouson, the business manager, and I could do to quiet her."

She looked at her wrist and exclaimed that she was late. She did have to hurry. I saw her down to the boat. The river had been rising steadily for the last hour or two, and I heard the boat scrape as it went over the door sill. I did not know whether to be glad that the wife was gone down and I could live like a cat for again or to be sorry for him of what we might find in the mud that was at ways left.

Peter was lying where I had put him on a folded blanket last in a clothes basket. I went back to him and sat down beside the basket.

"Peter!" I said. "Poor old Peter!"

Who did this to you? Who hurt you? He looked at me with a whimper as if he wanted to be taken home.

"Who hurt you?" I asked. And the dog looked close to his bed and shivered.

SOCIAL

Wednesday evening, Aug. 19 about six o'clock five or six citizens gathered at the home of Mrs. Ashley Stewart and tendered a farewell party Mrs. Stewart and daughter, Miss Bard, expect to leave for Clearfield next week where they will make their future home. Games and music were indulged in until 12 P. M., when long tables on the lawn were spread with delicious refreshments. As the people gathered around those tables the lights gleaming from the shade trees made a most beautiful sight. This popular family will be missed but what is Woodland's loss will be Clearfield's gain. We all join in wishing them happiness and prosperity. The out of town guests were Mrs. James Angew, of Alabama, Mrs. Harry Gilliland of Pottersdale, Mrs. Harvey Overly of Steubenville, Ohio, and Mrs. Paul Nall, of Pittsburgh.

Aviation Meet at Lock Haven.

Lock Haven will have a big aviation and fair meet on August 27, 28 and 29. It will be "Old Home" week in that city, and there will be aviation exhibitions, trotting and pacing events, baseball, etc. The event promises to attract a large crowd each day.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PARADE AT OSCEOLA CONVENTION

In connection with the Clearfield County Sunday School convention at Osceola Mills, Aug. 25-26, we will hold our annual Street Demonstration Tuesday evening, Aug. 25. GOOD DETECTIVE STORY SHOWN IN THE MOVIES

"The Man of Her Choice."

In "The Man of Her Choice" the girl, the man and the servant are cast away upon an uninhabited island—yes, and the dog. The girl and the man are engaged. The man, being just an ordinary, lower case man after all, thinks first of himself and his comfort. The servant finds edible berries and the man must have the largest portion because he is the master. The servant catches fish and the man must have the biggest one. In fact, the servant becomes a man and the man becomes a servant—to his own comfort.

The girl watches these things, little things, unnoticed in the whirl of civilized life; but bringing such a message in the waste of sand and sea. The servant, who has become a man, loves the girl and she knows. When they are rescued and she is in peril of returning again to the false standards for which stands the man, who is servant, the girl decides she is woman and takes the man of her choice—the servant who has become man.

In this Powers drama, which will be shown at the Opera house this evening Grace Conrad plays the part of the girl and Frances Ford the part of the servant.

"The Symphony of Souls"

It is the sympathy of a sweet blind girl that gives a young artist the inspiration for a great symphony. Then comes separation—longing—and final reconciliation.

"Detective Dan Cupid."

Love-lorn Bob is infatuated with a young woman whose name he does not know. He has been following her around for a week, and he feels that his heart will burst if he does not get an opportunity to declare his passion. One day he follows her to a park, and there conceives an idea. If he could only steal her handbag and later return it to her at the hotel, using the incident as an introduction, the rest, he believes, would be smooth sailing. He puts the idea into execution. However, a nearby policeman sees him steal the handbag and gives chase. Bob makes good his escape. Upon examining the purse he finds that it contains a costly diamond necklace. The next morning he awakens to find himself a notorious thief with a full description of himself in the papers. However, he learns that her name is Miss Victoria Van Allen. The girl's father employs Detective Potts to recover the jewel and land the thief.

Bob begins a wild and sensational career in attempting to return the necklace to the beautiful Victoria, and at the same time elude the sagacious Potts. He disguises and Potts disguises. They discover each other's identity and each assumes a new disguise.

Howbeit, the course of true love leads to victory. Bob is forgiven, and his suit accepted by Victoria, while Potts is presented with a fee large enough to hush his conscience in forgetfulness.

EUROPEAN WAR AND THE OLYMPIC GAMES OF 1916

BY FRANK G. MENKE.

(By International News Service)
New York, August 22.—The European war means that the Olympic games will not be played in Berlin in 1916. Either they will be shifted to the United States or cancelled altogether. The latter seems the most likely happening.

If the war should drag along until 1916 it seems certain that none of the European powers engaged in the strife would have time to think about such pink tea battles as those staged at the Olympic doings. And even if it wanted to send a team it probably couldn't because by that time some of their best little athletes may be shot full of holes.

Should war be over before the end of this year it's possible that the games will be played, but not in Berlin. Fancy a bunch of Frenchmen, Englishmen or Russians invading the Kaiser's domain and devoting themselves exclusively to peaceful sports. Imagine the German residents of Berlin hiring a brass band to herald the arrival of some of their present day enemies.

One needn't stretch the imagination very hard to figure out what would happen if all the athletics got together and someone started a discussion concerning the merits of the different armies and navies.

The officials who have charge of the Olympic doings for 1916 refuse to state definitely whether the games will be transferred or postponed indefinitely. But it is known that they view the possibility of holding the 1916 Olympic games in Berlin as hopeless.

The Browns, used to a free and easy life, didn't take very kindly at first to the Y. M. C. A. methods that Branch Rickey put into force as soon as he took over the managerial reins. But they've gotten used to them now, and most of them are willing to admit that Rickey's rule that sends a player to bed at a certain hour every p. m. is a good one for the player's general health and general good.

Refraining from poker and other little gambling games was another hardship for the Browns, but they have overcome their gambling instincts—at least while Rickey is around.

The Browns this year are higher up in the race than they have been for years and years and years. Whether the improvement is due to Rickey's new rules, or whether it's just a natural improvement that has come through infusion of new blood is a question. In the meantime, Rickey gets the credit.

The Cardinals have on their roster a pitcher who wears glasses. His name is Lee Meadows, a giant right hander, who hails from Durham, N. C. He will report to the Cards later in the season.

Despite the fact that Meadows is compelled to wear glasses while at work he has been pitching wonderful baseball, and was sought after by a number of big leagues, but the Cards nabbed him.

PITTSBURGH MAN WINS CHIEF HIBERNIAN HONOR

The principal business transacted yesterday in the state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians was the election of officers. P. J. Killgallen, of Pittsburgh, won out after a close contest with Dr. J. A. Farrell, of Chester, a margin of six votes separating them. There was no contest for the other offices, which are as follows: Vice president, John Campion, Schuylkill county; secretary, John B. Boyle, Luzerne.

The meeting place for 1915 was not chosen, this detail being left to the executive committee. Yesterday morning a resolution was adopted deploring the death of Pope Pius. After the newly-elected officers were installed adjournment was taken.

The auxiliary session was more protracted, the elections requiring a lot of time. In the race for president, a Pittsburgh woman won out. Miss Margaret McQuaide, county secretary of Allegheny county, defeated Mrs. Margaret Gallagher by 17 votes.

TROUBLES OF WAR CORRESPONDENTS

Newspaper Men Have Anything But a Happy Time of It OFTENER IN JAIL THAN OUT

Arrested on Suspicion of Being Spies They Have Difficulty in Convincing Ignorant Peasants That They are Harmless Journalists— Experience of One Reporter in Belgium.

(By International News Service.)

London, Aug. 22.—The newspaper correspondents attempting to cover the great war in Europe are having a sorry time. Especially in Belgium, where the bulk of the fighting has occurred, are correspondents harried by almost every conceivable difficulty. According to a letter received here from a London newspaper man in Belgium, correspondents there are being arrested several times daily as spies, are not allowed to get within canon sound of the fighting and if they do happen to obtain any information regarding what is going on, the censors will not allow them to send it.

"I do not anticipate ever getting anywhere near a battlefield," writes the correspondent referred to, "and I do not expect I should be allowed to return alive with my story if I did get to the front."

"I am having a ——— of a time with these military blighters here. Most of my afternoons and evenings are spent in jail. I have a pass from the Belgian war office with my photograph attached and countersigned by the general staff, but the trouble is that no one will apparently recognize it. It is a pure bluff, and not worth the paper it is written on."

"Also the peasants who are too infirm to go to the front and the youngsters of every village throughout Belgium have turned themselves into a police force. If you try to go anywhere outside of Brussels in an automobile you are held up, searched and asked to show your papers every half-mile."

"Yesterday two Belgian journalists and myself went to Namur and Dinant, a journey of about eighty miles, hoping to discover the whereabouts of friends. I kept a record and found we were stopped fifty-two times."

"On reaching Namur on our way back despite our official papers we were arrested as spies and dragged off by a band of ferocious soldiers to the military headquarters, followed by a savage mob, anxious to lynch us. We were kept there for some time before being released."

"When we got to the office of the commandant, we found the London Times man already there, a prisoner."

"The most dangerous part of the game is that the average peasant armed with a rusty blunderbuss, who harries one along the roads in the country, cannot even read and official papers mean nothing to him."

"For them everybody not wearing the Belgian uniform is a German spy."

"Some Belgian officers are little better than these ignorant peasants. Let me give you an example. Yesterday, on leaving Namur on our way to Brussels three officers, members of the Flying Corps, asked for a lift as far as the aerodrome. Anxious to oblige, I consented, and drove them right inside the ground where the aeroplanes are kept. Once there they rewarded our kindness by denouncing us as spies and ordering our arrest by soldiers.

"This will give you some idea of the difficulties encountered in attempting to get anywhere near where things are happening. I do not anticipate ever getting anywhere within sound of a battlefield, and, even if I should succeed in getting to the front, I do not expect that I should ever be allowed to return alive with my story."

"All these people have made up their minds to harry correspondents, as if they were so many dogs."

Japan Ready for the Worst.

New York, Aug. 22.—The "Evening Telegram" prints a dispatch from Tokio stating that Japan defies Germany to do her worst. Japan is preparing to assault Kiao-Chau territory. Immediately upon the expiration of the ultimatum tomorrow the Japanese will make an attack.

In defying Japan, Germany refused to withdraw her warships from the Pacific waters. Nor did Germany make any preparation to evacuate Kiao-Chau.

War a Matter of Course.

Tokio, Aug. 22.—The Japanese press is coolly viewing war with Germany as a matter of fact.

German Minister to Sail.

The "Hochi" says the German ambassador will sail for America on August 26.

Japan Will Not Consent.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Japan not only will not request United States to take over Kiao-Chau for transfer to China, as proposed by the latter at the instance of Germany, but will not consent to any arrangement of this character. Furthermore, the ambassador has informed the administration that the participation in any scheme to permit Germany to evade the exact terms of the ultimatum will be regarded by Japan as an unfriendly act.

Japanese Fleet Sails.

Shanghai, Aug. 22.—The Japanese battleship fleet has sailed to bombard Tsing-Toa, Kiao-Chau seaport and cover the landing of Japanese troops there, according to an official statement here. Sixteen thousand soldiers sailed on the Kokura.
